

How to Train Your Human

A Dog's Guide to Sounds, Snacks & Success

Hear the Sound?

Beep! Look at your human.

That little sound means payday — usually a fun treat.

And no, the device is not a snack.

The Golden Rule: Sound = Treat

Sound. Look. Treat. Repeat.

"You're paying me just to look at you?"

Yep. Best job ever.

Do it 5-10 times, then take a break.

Stop. Look. Get praised. Get paid. Carry on.

In other words: pause your very important dog business, check in with your human, collect your treat, then resume operations.

Sound = Come Here.

Hear it? Go to your human.

Yes, even if you were investigating a very important leaf.

When you arrive: praise + reward.

But payment varies. You might get a treat, pets, a toy, a belly rub, or access to something fun.

Same job. Different benefits.

This is an important corporate policy.

If the human uses the sound and you delay coming to them, you should never be punished.

Squirrel! Bird! Delivery person! Suspicious leaf!

Sometimes you're too busy sounding the alarm to hear the cue.

That's okay — barking is a tough habit to interrupt.

Keep practicing. This one takes time.

Easy first. Then level up.

Inside the house → Easy

Backyard → A little harder

Front yard → Interesting

Park → Very interesting

Park with squirrels → Advanced placement

Master one level before moving on. Graduate successfully? New toy. Obviously.

You're hired!

Title: Director of Listening & Human Response

Your duties: Hear it. Look. Come. Ignore squirrels. Bark less. Be adorable.

Your compensation package includes: Treats, belly rubs, walks, toys & praise.

Frankly, the benefits are excellent.

Congratulations, Fur baby!

You have successfully completed Sound Device Training.
Now, go sit somewhere inconvenient and stare at your human until dinner.